

Highlights

- Mainstream vs. user-generated media competition drives collective emotion bifurcation.
- The critical channel-balance ratio is derived analytically from mean-field theory.
- Engagement activity rises before polarization, serving as an early-warning signal.
- Network simulations confirm the transition under heterogeneous connectivity.
- Both predicted signatures appear in large-scale COVID-19 social-media data.